For more than 100 years, the Kilnsey Show has been a highlight of the Yorkshire calendar. In the summer of 1973, George Hartley and Jim Sayer were photographed as they demonstrated the art of dry stone walling. Fast forward almost 30 years and little has changed. This year's show will take place on September 1. Alongside the dry stone walling displays, visitors will also have a chance to see vintage tractors, a wide range of cattle and sheep and, for the more energetic, the show has also made its name in the world of fell racing.
